CLASSICAL LIBERAL ARTS ACADEMY

Private Education for Catholic Families

Serious study, assessed and tutored, under your direction.

There is no Catholic school in Union County, but there is another option for Catholic children.

HOW IT WAS DONE

The Oldest Way to Educate a Child

For most of history, families who wanted the best education for a child did not send him to a school. They kept him under their own roof and engaged a private tutor.

The parents directed. The child studied. The tutor examined his work and helped him wherever he struggled.

Saints, scholars and statesmen were formed this way. The education was personal, demanding and suited to each child. Its only drawback was its cost.

THE MODERN DILEMMA

A False Choice

Parents today are told they have only two options, and both are modern inventions.

Common schooling was devised in the nineteenth century to educate children in large numbers. Once a child is enrolled, the school decides what he studies, how and why, and individual attention is rare.

Do-it-yourself homeschooling arose in the last fifty years. It keeps parents in charge, but asks them to teach subjects they never studied, with little help and little accountability.

Neither gives a child what the private tutor gave: serious study, honestly examined, with personal help.

THE SOLUTION

The Old Way Made Possible Today

Parent-Directed Private Education restores the private tutor. The Academy's materials, examinations and records make it affordable for ordinary families.

1. You set your child's course of study.
2. The Academy supplies the study materials and instructions.
3. Your child completes his studies at home each week.
4. The Academy examines his work for quality completion.
5. The Academy offers support when and where it is needed.
6. The Academy maintains all records.

Note: Under North Carolina law, a family registers as a "home school" to take responsibility for the education of its own children. The Academy provides the materials, examinations, tutoring and accredited records.
